Introduction

This resource guide has been developed to help local traffic safety coordinators and organizations find assistance to meet their communities' traffic safety needs. The information was compiled by the Transportation Safety Division of the Oregon Department of Transportation.

The resource guide contains the following sections:

Statewide and Regional Resources

An alphabetical listing of agencies that can provide assistance to local traffic safety efforts.

City and County Resources

A listing by county of local programs that are involved in traffic safety efforts or that can provide assistance to traffic safety groups.

If you have questions or need further assistance with a particular traffic safety issue, please contact the ODOT Transportation Safety Division (TSD). We encourage your comments and additional information for future updates of this publication. To update or add any information, please use the enclosed form on the last page.

Carol Routh
carol@hevanet.com

The SAFE Traffic Awareness Class addresses attitude change and anger management behind the wheel. The class covers the math and physics of speed, how little time is actually saved by speeding, high risk behaviors of “good” drivers, who are really in control and why, what makes cell phones so risky, and how to take control of the road so as to reduce the likelihood of a wreck. The 6-hour class is given one or two Saturdays a month for traffic offenders of all ages, usually referred by judges, and can be adapted for employee or school groups. Students pay $50 tuition.

Teen Driving Network

PO Box 13714
Portland, Oregon 97213

Jeff Sargent, VP of Marketing

Members are provided with bumper stickers that parents apply to their teen’s car saying, “How’s My Driving” including a toll-free number. When someone sees either good or bad driving behavior, they call the number on the sticker and recount the incident. A report is generated and sent to parents by e-mail or fax.

Trauma Nurses Talk Tough Network (about saving your life) is an injury prevention program presented by trauma nurses and other emergency medical personnel throughout the state. The slide/lecture presentations use real-life stories and events to illustrate consequences of risk-taking behavior. Generally, the presentation covers the major causes for injury deaths for the audiences' age groups, but it can be adapted to focus on bicycle safety, safety belts, alcohol and drug involvement, or any other cause of injuries that may be a problem in a certain geographical area. Call Simone Carter if you need further information for a presentation in your community or school.
